

FREE News Letter

FREE News Letter

Stay current with therapy & rehab news. Just enter your email below:

submit

► Education

Private Schools for Troubled Teens

Christian Schools

Preparing for College

Truancy in Teenagers

Helping Teens Succeed Academically

Home Schooling Teens

Bullying in Schools

Helping Teens Develop Study

Habits

Test Taking Dos and Don'ts for Parents

Teens Who Drop Out of School

Specialty Boarding Schools

What to look for in a College

Dealing with Slumping Grades

Boarding Schools

Teens Kicked Out of School

Drugs in Schools

College Prep Schools

How can High School

Counselors Help your Teen

Consultants for Education

► Other Teen Issues

Facing Peer Pressure

Self Mutilation Among Teens

Teens and Sex

Teen Therapy

Single Parenting of Teens

Your Teenager, Tattoos and

Piercings

Teen Marriage

TEEN ISSUES

Teen Self-Esteem

Helping Teens Deal with

Divorce

Dealing with Puberty

Relocating With Your Teenagers

Teens and Pornography

Communicating with Teens

Teens on the Internet

Pre-teen/Early Adolescent

Problems

Teen Addictions

A List of Helpful Books

Education > Helping Teens Succeed Academically

Helping Teens Succeed Academically

The bad news about helping teens succeed academically is that there is no short cut - it will take time. The good news is that if you can prioritize it enough so that you are undistracted, you will find this time some of the most rewarding ever spent with your child. Now, the immediate problem that comes up, is this question of prioritizing and the unholly fact that most parents are not saints.

Most parents have worked hard all day.

They want to put their feet up, stare mindlessly at the TV, even read a book. What they feel the least like doing is wrapping their overstrained minds around high school algebra or the structure of an academic essay. This is fine. I'm glad we got that out in the open. At least now our imperfect lives will not be overshadowed by paragons of parenting that supposedly find self sacrifice a painless natural instinct. We are, most of us, the same. We want the best for our teens. We love them and we want them to excel it's just that we wish that there was paid leave to pursue parenting duties when we are fresh and enthusiastic.

The French have a saying: with the eating comes the appetite. Yes, I am afraid that is exactly what I am suggesting. We have to do it. That is, we have to switch off the TV, sit upright and put the big light on so we can see the small print in the textbook and our sullen and confused teenager directly behind it. And our exhausted reluctance is often not our only obstacle. We are going to have to find enough energy to convince our offspring that they need our help. (Help is used here with qualifications. Never do the work for a child, help means pointing them in the direction of self-sufficiency.) This is a tough one because teens have perfected the unworkable combination of arrogance and neediness. This results in us wanting to simultaneously hug them and drop them off somewhere on a deserted highway. So this is the scenario. Just when you thought it was safe to come home and collapse in a heap, life requires that you find an elusive measure of maturity, stir in a little intelligence and garnish with love. I said it wasn't going to be easy. So you're sitting there and mutual resentment is clouding the otherwise soft evening air. You don't want to be here doing this and your teen doesn't want to be here doing this either. You think you are doing a good job of hiding this overwhelming fact and your teen doesn't even care to disguise his own disenchantment. He or she doesn't believe in you. You can't blame them because you don't believe in you either.

Ordinarily this would not be a recipe for success. This would not be a clip from The Little House on the Prairie. But, I have been there when the chips were down and our backs were against the wall, which was on the wall, and I have seen it change. I have seen scowls dissipate and sighs die. I don't know what it is. Perhaps something wonderful and magical supports us in our heroic endeavors to overcome our limitations and reach for excellence. When I have had the sheer willpower to get beyond my own exhaustion I have seen absolute miracles of communication that cannot help but reinforce academic excellence as well as lots of other important stuff.

I have remembered more than I ever thought possible and I have had the absolute pleasure of passing that on to a child that has forgotten to be sullen and thanks me like it comes from the heart. In this stumbling way I have learnt how to make a difference to my children's academic experience. I have learnt to listen to them and found myself forgetting about the program I was missing or the book I was reading. When you sit down with your teenager you realize that school is not a comprehensive educator and that you need to supplement it in significant ways. You need to get involved to do this, and once you're involved it comes naturally. You stop feigning interest and start generating excitement about the material. This enthusiasm of yours is contagious and before you know it your children are experiencing academic success that helps them believe in themselves. And that is all I ever wanted. I knew that if my teens had that, the rest would follow naturally.

Gail
Boulder, CO

Sentences: 45 Words: 769

[Edit Page Content]

Site Sponsor

If you are interested in schools that can help troubled teens, contact a representative from Lifelines Family Services.

Lifelines Family Services Offers information on: Troubled Teen Boot Camps, Military Schools, Specialty Private Boarding Schools, Wilderness Programs, and other options for Troubled Teens.

Site Sponsor

CALL NOW or Click Here for information online!

Ways to Avoid Predators on myspace.com

Teenage Gambling

► Teen Drug Abuse

Teens: Drug Use in the Family

Teen Drug Abuse

Marijuana and Teens

Teens and Smoking

Prescription Drug Abuse Among

Teens

Teens and Steroids

Rave Drug use Among Teens

Crystal Meth use among Teens

Teen Binge Parties

Over-The-Counter Drug Abuse

Teen Drug Use

Teens and Alcohol

Methamphetamine use among

Teens

Ecstasy and Teens

Cocaine Use Among Teens

Recent Trends of Teen Drug

Abuse

Recent Trends on Teenage

Smoking

► Teen Health

Teens And Healthy Eating

Childhood Obesity

Mood Swings

Teen Pregnancy

Helping Teens Handle Stress

Teen Depression

Bulimia in Teens

Anorexia in Teens

OPPOSITIONAL DEFIANT

DISORDER

Teens with ADD

Teens with ADHD

► Teens and Power-Struggles

► Tips for Parenting Teens

Teens and Video Games

Appreciating Your Teen

Extracurricular Activities

Effects of Bad Peer Groups

Teens and Dating

Motivating Teens

Some Quality Books on

Parenting Teens

Choosing Role Models for Teens

Teens and Grandparents

Parenting Teen Support Groups

Book Reviews

► Troubled Teens

Teen Suicide

Teen Violence

Teens and the Juvenile Justice

System

Teens and Gangs

Adolescent Therapy

For more information CALL NOW or: Click Here

Reader Comments (Add Your Comment)

Links (Add Link)

Struggling Teens

Boot Camps for Teens

Options for Troubled Teens

Teen Problems

Self-Abuse in Teenagers

Wilderness Programs for Teens

Residential Treatment Centers

for Teens

Signs of Sexual Abuse

Brat Camps for Troubled Teens

Difficult Teens

Juvenile Delinquent

Troubled Teens

Runaway Teens

Teens and Lying

At-Risk Youth Programs

Recent Trends of Teen Violence

copywrite 2005 ParentingTeens.com All rights reserved.

Search this blog:

» Blogs that link here

» View my profile

adminlogin